

Reading is an appreciated pastime for many Canadian respondents, with 37% citing that it remains a hobby in their adult life. This is further showcased by the 84% of them who reported having read a book in the last 12 months, a figure which is in line with the study average. However, only 67% bought a book during this period, which is slightly below the 19-country average of 72%. Paper books represent the most purchased format, but Canadian respondents tend to appreciate e-books more than other surveyed countries, particularly the 18-34-year-olds (43% compared to the 28% average for e-book purchases). Canada remains in line with the other surveyed countries in terms of type of books purchased, with 36% of respondents opting for second-hand books and 90% going for new ones. As in the other countries surveyed, the most popular genre is fiction, followed by non-fiction, biographies and memoirs. Most Canadian respondents (75%) like to buy books both online and in physical bookshops, with the main incentives to buying in independent physical bookshops being the convenience and the enjoyable atmosphere.

Introduction

In order to stay resilient, keep a relevant offer of books and a viable business in a fast-paced world, retailers such as booksellers need a solid understanding and knowledge of current trends and consumers' shopping priorities. To a certain degree, such knowledge can be gained from engaging with the regular customers and the local community, but real foresight can only be achieved through research into customers' priorities and behaviours, through data collection and analysis. To meet this need and sector priority, EIBF commissioned a study through its RISE Bookselling project titled RISE study on Consumer Behaviour-Book-Buying Trends, Reading Habits & Customer Needs in December 2023.

Out of several candidates, Listen, a Belgian-based consultancy with pre-existing contacts and experience in multi-country surveys was deemed the most fitting and was contracted in late 2023 to carry out the study. Throughout spring 2024, Listen conducted an online quantitative survey in 19 countries across the globe, where EIBF's members are based. A representative sample of 500 respondents was collected per country, and 9500 people were surveyed in total, giving us unique insights and the possibility to compare current trends and consumers' attitudes to book-buying in the 19 countries surveyed.

The study takes into consideration that globalisation and the digital revolution have undoubtedly changed the way people purchase and consume goods, including books, thus transforming today's retail environment and customers' buying habits. Research like this is therefore invaluable as it can provide booksellers with tools and precious information to help anticipate what their customers look for and might expect from them, not only today, but also tomorrow. Most importantly, it can help them remain competitive and resilient.
