

Latvia

The share of readers among Latvian respondents is lower than average when compared to the 19 countries surveyed, with 76% having read a book in the last 12 months (average at 85%) and 62% having bought one (average at 72%). Paper books dominate the market while purchases of e-books and audiobooks are lower than the sample pool average. That said, Latvia has a greater percentage of respondents buying only in physical shops, 27% - compared with the study average of 14%. In Latvia as for the rest of the countries, the book market is mainly dominated by fiction, although by a smaller margin when compared to the average of all respondents. Education and textbooks, together with children/young adult books complete the Top 3 and are more purchased by Latvian respondents than by the average of study respondents.

Introduction

In order to stay resilient, keep a relevant offer of books and a viable business in a fast-paced world, retailers such as booksellers need a solid understanding and knowledge of current trends and consumers' shopping priorities. To a certain degree, such knowledge can be gained from engaging with the regular customers and the local community, but real foresight can only be achieved through research into customers' priorities and behaviours, through data collection and analysis. To meet this need and sector priority, EIBF commissioned a study through its RISE Bookselling project titled RISE study on Consumer Behaviour-Book-Buying Trends, Reading Habits & Customer Needs in December 2023.

Out of several candidates, Listen, a Belgian-based consultancy with pre-existing contacts and experience in multi-country surveys was deemed the most fitting and was contracted in late 2023 to carry out the study. Throughout spring 2024, Listen conducted an online quantitative survey in 19 countries across the globe, where EIBF's members are based. A representative sample of 500 respondents was collected per country, and 9500 people were surveyed in total, giving us unique insights and the possibility to compare current trends and consumers' attitudes to book-buying in the 19 countries surveyed.

The study takes into consideration that globalisation and the digital revolution have undoubtedly changed the way people purchase and consume goods, including books, thus transforming today's retail environment and customers' buying habits. Research like this is therefore invaluable as it can provide booksellers with tools and precious information to help anticipate what their customers look for and might expect from them, not only today, but also tomorrow. Most importantly, it can help them remain competitive and resilient.
