

American respondents are particularly fond of the enjoyable atmosphere they find in independent bookshops, as highlighted by an impressive 51% of respondents. A majority of them (81%) have read a book in the last 12 months, and 2 out of 3 have bought one. In addition, even if paper books still dominate the market, American respondents are drawn towards other formats: 40% and 26% have bought e-books and audiobooks respectively. These numbers are noticeable when compared to the study average of 28% (e-books) and 16% (audiobook). When it comes to the type of books purchased, new books are much more in demand. However, second-hand books are more popular among American respondents than among the average of study respondents, with 42% of them reporting buying second-hand, compared to the 35% average. As in the other countries surveyed, fiction is the most purchased genre, followed by biographies and memoirs – a genre particularly popular among the country respondents.

Introduction

In order to stay resilient, keep a relevant offer of books and a viable business in a fast-paced world, retailers such as booksellers need a solid understanding and knowledge of current trends and consumers' shopping priorities. To a certain degree, such knowledge can be gained from engaging with the regular customers and the local community, but real foresight can only be achieved through research into customers' priorities and behaviours, through data collection and analysis. To meet this need and sector priority, EIBF commissioned a study through its RISE Bookselling project titled RISE study on Consumer Behaviour-Book-Buying Trends, Reading Habits & Customer Needs in December 2023.

Out of several candidates, Listen, a Belgian-based consultancy with pre-existing contacts and experience in multi-country surveys was deemed the most fitting and was contracted in late 2023 to carry out the study. Throughout spring 2024, Listen conducted an online quantitative survey in 19 countries across the globe, where EIBF's members are based. A representative sample of 500 respondents was collected per country, and 9500 people were surveyed in total, giving us unique insights and the possibility to compare current trends and consumers' attitudes to book-buying in the 19 countries surveyed.

The study takes into consideration that globalisation and the digital revolution have undoubtedly changed the way people purchase and consume goods, including books, thus transforming today's retail environment and customers' buying habits. Research like this is therefore invaluable as it can provide booksellers with tools and precious information to help anticipate what their customers look for and might expect from them, not only today, but also tomorrow. Most importantly, it can help them remain competitive and resilient.
